GROUP POETRY READING!

Part 4: All Together Now

DO YOU REMEMBER?

Over the course of this poetry project we have learned about Poetry Slam Competitions which changed the way poetry readings sounded.

This next poem is about a cantelope.

We also learned about the national Poetry Out Loud competition for high school students

Pennsylvania will dominate!

Turn around!
You're stealing
focus!

And we also went over tips on how best to deliver your group poem like not stealing focus and acting like a team.

Vocab Time!

Cue

Oh! How to fly!

They are red wings that have forgotten...

Psst! That's your

- A cue is the line or word that comes right before you speak.
  - It could also be referred to as your cue line.
  - You should anticipate speaking when you hear your cue line.

AND NOW ....

Turn around!
You're stealing
focus!

I thought before we jump into our group poetry readings you might lie to see what the authors of your poems looked like. So here's a brief look at our poets.

Langston Hughes

Billy Collins

Siv Cedering

Nikki Giovanni

Jane Hirshfield

e.e. cummings

INSTRUCTIONS

I need my poetry team!

- Stay in formation. Make sure you're not blocking anyone.
- Speak slowly and clearly so we can hear what your saying.
- If you have a movement with your line don't be afraid to really go for it.
